SAYS VERDUN

Tide Has Definitely Turned And German Forces Cannot Now Possibly Win—
Says Famin is in Sight

The London Daily Chronicle correspondent in Paris sends the following dispatch:

"Although the German commanders dare not confess failure in their Verdun enterprise by closing it down and cutting off the losses, the stress of public interest here, now altogether relieved of anxiety, is passing to other fields where events of different character are preparing.

"Now that 300,000 of the best German soldiers have been lost on the hillsides of the Meuse, a very grave and daily aggravated situation faces the kaiser and his grand staff. The tide has definitely turned. From west and east their long-evaded destiny is closing in upon them.

"At no moment in the battle of Verdun have they dared to bring this or any unit from before the British front. Other parts of the German front have been stripped of all the superfluous strength and the force in Russia similarly crippled to feed this adventure.

"There is every reason to hope that with the close of the battle of Verdun there is opening a new and decisive stage of the war, in which its authors will be brought to reason, if not by an imminent threat, then by the actual hand of famine and military disaster."

Dept. of Agriculture

Issues War Book

The Agricultural War Book, issued for free distribution by the federal Department of Agriculture, is the most complete book ever published in the complete book ever published in Canada entirely devoted to the subject which it mainly treats. Besides the general matter brought together by the editor, the commissioner of agriculture, some seventy agricultural and education experts have contributed its 250 pages.

While there are statistics of world's as well as of Canada's produce last year, for purposes of comparison, and two or three years preceding, the book is a long way from being confined to figures. On the contrary it contains pages upon pages of textual information, instruction and sound advice appertaining to its title.

—“Production and Thrift.” Not alone would the farmer and breeder be better for its study but every household, every citizen would profit following its counsel, which, in a general sense, is embodied in the motto that appears on the front cover, namely:

IN WAR TIME,
Produce more and save more.
Make your labor efficient,
Save material from waste,
Spend your money wisely.

THE SCHOOL QUESTION.

There is probably no question which comes before our parliament that has a greater tendency to create discord and dissension than the school question. Yet there is probably no question which bubbles up more frequently than this same one. For various reasons it may be hard to keep this matter out of politics. This is unfortunate. While it may be natural for it to creep into the political arena when conditions are normal, seems deplorable that a resolution such as was before the federal house last week should have appeared on the order paper at a time like the present.

The resolution was the outcome of trouble in Ontario over the bilingual question. Under no condition should it have been introduced into the federal house as it is a matter which the province of Ontario should settle itself, since each province controls its own school affairs.

This matter of schools, bilingual and religious, is one that must be taken out of politics and settled for good. The time to do this is right now, as the longer it is let drag the harder it is going to be to make a satisfactory settlement. Just as long as this question is used as a political football for getting votes, just so long will it be the cause of trouble, turmoil and bad feelings.

There never was a time in the history of Canada when big men were needed more than they are right now. Big men in the truest sense of the word. Men who can get above the petty vote catching stage and deal with questions with an eye single to the development and advancement of Canada as a whole. Alberta has seen a good example in regard to bilingual schools. On two occasions the question came before the legislature. It was not made a party issue. Both sides declared for one language in our schools because both knew that was the best for the province as a whole. The Alberta members in the commonsense also voted against the resolution presented to the house last week.

DAYLIGHT SAVING.

It is now beginning to look as though the daylight saving scheme had passed the experimental stage and is destined to become a world-wide economic question.

Its growing popularity is not confined to this continent where it is being tried out in the larger cities both east and west. It is among the economic questions which is being brought out in many European countries as a result of the war.

Its champions claim that it not only is a means of reducing the cost of living but furnishes the opportunity for workmen to spend more of the daylight hours with their families and incidentally do work around the home that will contribute to their happiness. This, in itself, is a strong argument in its favor, especially at the present time, but as we said before, why manipulate the clock to deceive ourselves? Why not just start and stop work an hour earlier? There is no difference, then all would have standard time. Under the present plan the clocks in towns and cities which have the daylight saving system say it is noon while clocks in neighboring sections elements six miles away say it is 1 o'clock.

While we heartily agree with the principle of the new system, the hit and miss way in which it is being applied does seem ridiculous. If it is good for one district it should be good for the whole country. If the scheme is to be adopted at all it should be Dominion-wide or at least province-wide.

It appears to us like a matter which should be taken up by the different provincial legislatures.

POULTRY RAISING

Canadian eggs have found favor on the British market, and the prospects are that, providing they are available, much larger quantities will be shipped this year. The unusually high prices prevailing at the present time are largely due to this anticipated export demand.

Although some uneasiness has existed on the part of the trade as regards transportation facilities in view of the high freight rates and the shortage of boats, it is now reasonably certain that an even greater demand for Canadian poultry and eggs will occur this year. It is important, therefore, that every poultry producer takes steps to promote thereby, by hatching as many chickens as possible this spring. It is the time, by hatching early, by hatching everything possible in the month of May, to guard against the marketing of so much small, undersized, poorly finished poultry, which usually becomes a drag on the market in the fall of the year. Again it is only by hatching now, and giving the chickens every possible chance to thrive and grow, that a maximum supply of eggs can be obtained in the winter time.

Given their proportionate amount of attention, the growing of poultry brings quick and profitable returns to the farmer. With the increasing cost of meats, milk, butter, etc., there is a constantly increasing demand for poultry and eggs. The labor problem is not critical, as the boys and girls on the farm can readily take care of the poultry. The cost of feed is nominal, prices for poultry and eggs are high—the highest in fact, for many years. It is obvious, therefore, that Canadians have a patriotic, as well as an economic duty to perform in making the year 1916 the banner year for poultry production in Canada.

PRODUCTION TO CAPACITY.

Is the farmer justified in believing that the firm tone of the horse market and the present high prices for live stock rest up on a secure foundation? May he look forward with any confidence to the next season's or next year's market? Should he prepare, as against an advertised shortage and high prices for all classes of farm animals, by breeding a large number of mares or of cows, sheep, hogs and poultry? We are confident that the farmer has never been in a more secure position than at the present, as regards the extension of his breeding operations.

Buyers report that the better classes of drafters and farm chunks are getting scarce and hard to buy. The same holds true of good big roadsters and saddlers. The noticeable scarcity of good horses of these descriptions illustrates the fact that demand has already overtaken supply and makes it very evident that all the really good sound mares in the country should be bred this year. It cannot be too strongly emphasized, however, that they should be mated only with strictly high class sires.

The fifteen million C. N. R. loan estimate was voted in the house of commons after a discussion lasting for four hours. It did not meet with any determined objection.

COMPARE MANITOBA WITH NEBRASKA

A Contrast and Example—How Manufacturing can be Developed in Agricultural Area—A Lesson to Read

Nebraska has an area of 76,646 square miles, as compared with Manitoba's 251,832 square miles. Nebraska's population in 1900 was 1,046,300. The population of Manitoba is now under 500,000.

Omaha, the principal city of Nebraska, has a population today of approximately 162,000 last year, manufactured goods to the value of $77,463,000, an increase of $1,000,000 over the previous year. In the last four years this city has gained 11.5 per cent. in the volume of manufactured products. The amount of capital invested in manufacturing in Omaha is now $1,264,000. Wages paid to workers have increased 20 per cent. in four years, and over $13,000,000 worth of raw materials were used by Omaha factories during 1914. The six other cities in this state show what manufacturing has done. Lincoln has 49,000 population, Grand Island 12,000, Hastings 11,000, Beatrice 10,000 and Fremont 10,000. The figures given are on a very conservative estimate.

Statistics Bureau of Census at Washington.

Industries vs. Imports

It seems evident that Nebraska has developed her industries instead of developing her imports. Here cities have passed the "wait-and-see" stage. Surely self-interest would suggest to the Western Canadian that he buy the products of his own country or goods made in the West for Western needs. If he can buy them at equal quality at 10 per cent. less, why not else the market efforts. These are statistical, self-evident times, and it is necessary to the foreign manufacturer and foreign worker an equal opportunity with the Canadian manufacturer and Canadian worker. It is evident that the foreigner gets the best of the deal because the Canadian producer is accorded no similar favor in the foreign market, such as are granted foreign goods in the Canadian market.

Shall we have manufacturing centres or merely distributing centres? Shall we steadily reduce our population by driving the worker and his family to where factories are a part of the landscape? Shall we reduce the home market to the minimum and take a close and ready demand for the product of our farms? These things are a result of importing goods instead of making them, of buying by mail instead of buying at home, of dragging down the value of the Western cities, towns and villages. The development of manufacturing, the purchasing of Canadian-made goods, and the patronizing of the home-town store are a vital element in the welfare and progress of both city and rural community. Let us learn a lesson from Nebraska!

Down to Realities

Canadians and Western Canadians in particular, must take the Nebraska lesson to heart. The war has brought us all down to realities. If we are to be assured of a normal legitimate growth in Western Canada in the years to follow the war all of us will have to see to it that we do our share to stimulate this growth. We must give thought to where the goods we purchase come from, whether Canadian workmen are benefiting by our purchases as much as they should, and whether the policy we are supporting is one calculated to sustain on a reasonable basis the farming and manufacturing industries, which, in cooperation, are essential to national success.

Buyers report that the better classes of drafters and farm chunks are getting scarce and hard to buy. The same holds true of good big roadsters and saddlers. The noticeable scarcity of good horses of these descriptions illustrates the fact that demand has already overtaken supply and makes it very evident that all the really good sound mares in the country should be bred this year. It cannot be too strongly emphasized, however, that they should be mated only with strictly high class sires.

The fifteen million C. N. R. loan estimate was voted in the house of commons after a discussion lasting for four hours. It did not meet with any determined objection.

The royal commissioners appointed to inquire into the origin of the parliament, presented their report last Monday night. It is a non-committal finding. The commissioners stated that while there are many circumstances connected with the fire that lead to a strong suspicion of incendiarism, yet there is nothing in the evidence to justify the finding that the fire was "maliciously set."

QUESTION UNASKED

Not Propounded in Court, but Makes Subsequent Proposal Very Easy.

By GENTLEMAN MARY SHERIDAN.
The flashlights of the camera men boomed from every angle of the courtroom. There was a suppressed cheer following the solemn announcement of the forum of the jury:

"Not guilty!"
Cameras and eyes sought one special corner of the place. It was where a disgraced, the faced old man had sat all through the trial—where he was at the trial—where he was at the trial. A faint expression of gladness crossed his face. Then it softened down to extreme tenderness. Evelyn, his daughter, his constant companion during the trying ordeal of the past few days, had thrown her arms about his neck and was sobbing out her joy upon his bosom.

"Not guilty!" she gasped. "Oh father, did you hear?"

"What else could it be, my child?" replied Mr. Dayton proudly. "I expected it."
It was so unjust, so cruel! murmured Evelyn. "How dared they bring that dreadful charge?" and against you—your dear father, whom everybody loves and respects!" Evelyn did not note the change in her final statement. It had been a nine days' wonder to the little city when, one week after the destruction by fire of the unused plant of the Dayton Manufacturing company, five former partners of Mr. Dayton had accused him of burning down the property.

There had been friction and litigation between the three partners, so severe that Mr. Dayton had closed down the works. He had offered his partners a fair settlement, which they had bitterly refused. The fire had settled it all. The only beneficiary through the insurance was Mr. Dayton.

This point his enemies had used against him, and this, together with the rather vague evidence of a night watchman that he had seen a cloaked person resembling the accused in appearance near the factory at midnight, had been the basis of the accusation in court.

"Mr. Dayton had been alone to prove that he had been confined to the house all that fatal day with a slight indisposition. He had gone to his room at eight o'clock. The jury had only his unsupported word for this for no member of the household was able to say that he had been seen again until the evening morning."

The base implication of the prosecution was that Mr. Dayton had slipped out of the house between the hours of eight and ten in the evening. They hinted that he had fired the plant and returned to his room before the flames were discovered.

"It was at the darkest hour in the trial for the anxious father and daughter, when their lawyer called Dr. Paul Merwin. A serious-faced young man, the Dayton had never seen before the witness stand. He was carefully but not expensively dressed. It was notable that he never even glanced at the accused man nor his daughter.

His evidence was plain, simple and convincing. He was a comparative stranger in the city working up a small practice. The evening before the fire he had been resting in the garden of the vacant house adjoining the Dayton mansion. Doctor Merwin swore positively that he had sat there, the Dayton house in clear view, from eight o'clock in the evening until nearly eleven p. m. During all this time, he testified, there was full light of the music room where Miss Dayton was entertaining some guests, and the up stairs apartment in a wing of the house where her father had been studiously engaged in reading over some account books.

The prosecution was confounded. The lawyers asked a formal question. There was no refutation of the evidence. Robert Dayton was a free man, honorably acquitted.

The young physician was close at the side of Mr. Dayton's attorney as the latter approached his client.

Just then the acquitted man was surrounded by a crowd of friends. Evelyn found the young physician in an impulse of deep joy she put out both her hands.

"We can never tell what we owe you," she said fervently, almost brokenly.

"It has been my great fortune to be of service to you," replied Doctor Merwin modestly.

For a moment her hands rested in the close earnest grasp. Almost quickly she withdrew them.

"It was fortunate the prosecution did not ask you the question, Dr. Merwin," the young lady heard the lawyer say mysteriously.

More than once that night Evelyn thought of the young physician. Some how she could not forget a single incident of their meeting. The day following the impression was deeper than ever. The next day she passed Doctor Merwin on the other side of the street. He bowed politely.

Thus she began to learn new things about the object of her interest. Evelyn discovered that the young man was having an uphill time of it in making professional headway. He had lost in his last two or three not dissuading clients, and she believed his services free to be few and far between. One day Evelyn went to her father.

"I am afraid you have been so busy you have forgotten to write Dr. Merwin an acknowledgment of our thanks, papa," she said demurely.

"I declare, that is so," exclaimed Mr. Dayton. "I will attend to it at once."

The manufacturer penned a kind and gracious note to the young man. It received formal recognition, but Dr. Merwin did not presume to appear in person.

"He seems to actually avoid us," said Evelyn to herself quite disappointedly. Then her face brightened as the suggestion came to her mind to let Dr. Merwin to a pending lawn party on the Dayton grounds.

"There never was a more agreeable and communicable fellow," Evelyn's brothers voted in favor of the young doctor before the evening was over.

"So interesting-looking and handsome," declared Evelyn's best girl friend.

Evelyn herself, however, could not rid herself of the notion that Dr. Merwin somehow held her at a distance. He was reserved with her to a degree she could not understand. There seemed to be a barrier between them. "It is not of my making," murmured pretty Evelyn, as the evening closed and the doctor agreed to come again.

In later years Evelyn never forgot the third evening he called. He seemed more care free than at that occasion that he ever had before. Then, moonlight, a charming garden spot, the air like new wine, and in the hazy distance Evelyn said:

"Dr. Merwin, I have always wished to ask you a very particular question for some time."

"Yes!" he intimated gently, with his usual rather and smile.

"You remember that day in the court room when we first met?"

"I have not forgotten it," he replied and Evelyn noted the same vivid expression in his face, akin to longing, to deep emotion, that had struck her on the occasion referred to.

"Mr. Telford said to you: 'It was fortunate the prosecution did not ask you the question.'"

"Yes," spoke Dr. Merwin, up a low tone.

"What did he mean?"

"Must I tell you the question?" asked her companion, a strange restraint in his bearing.

"I very much wish you would."

"Mr. Telford was intimating that had the other side questioned me too closely, it might have been embarrassing for me, and—yes, perhaps for you."

"I do not understand," murmured Evelyn, yet feeling intuitively that some vital revelation was about to be disclosed.

"Mr. Telford had asked how I came to be in the adjoining garden," pursued Dr. Merwin. "I should have been compelled to tell them that."

"Yes—that?" prompted Evelyn half playfully.

"That the evening I was in the next garden was one of many evenings I spent there. I had known you for a long time before that, Miss Dayton."

"You had—known me—for a long time?" she repeated vaguely.

"But you did not know me. How could you? I, as a humble, striving stranger, who saw you once, longed to see you again—even if it was at a stolen view—and then found the pleasure of life in listening to your beautiful singing. I had presumed myself that would be the last evening I dared to worship the star at a distance, and now I will go."

"Dr. Merwin," said Evelyn softly—(Copyright, 1915, by W. O. Chapman.)

Chief Event.

A schoolmaster is telling a rather funny story about himself. He began the story with the significant remark that one Saturday he paid the last of a series of visits to his dentist.

On the following Monday morning one or two of his pupils looked at him curiously, but, of course, nothing was said. It makes a point of trying to interest his pupils in the current affairs of the world, to whom his class assembled he opened his newspaper, and, as usual, asked the question:

"Well, children, what is the chief event that has happened since Friday?"

Quick as lightning came the reply from a little girl in the front row:

"Please, sir, you've had a set of false teeth!"

The speech of President Poincaré of France, in which the president declared that France did not want Germany to offer peace, but desired that she should ask peace of France, was widely commented on by the newspapers as the final and authoritative announcement of the French policy on the subject of peace.

BIRTHS.

KERR—In Redcliff on Friday, May 19, 1916, to Mr. and Mrs. D. Kerr, a daughter.

I REMEMBER, I REMEMBER

I remember, I remember, That house where I was born; The little window where the sun Came peeping in at morn. You'd hardly know the place now, For 'tis up to date, And the farm is scientific. From the back lot to the gate.

The house and barn are lighted With bright acetylene, The engine in the laundry Is run by gasoline. We have also, we have auto, We have vacuum and things; A telephone for gossip, And a photograph that sings.

The hired man has left us, We miss his homely face; A lot of college graduates Are waging in his place. There's an engineer and fireman, A chauffeur and a vet, Electrician and mechanic too, Oh, the farm's run right, you bet.

The little window where the sun Came peeping in at morn Now brightens up a bathroom That cost a car of corn.

The engine in the laundry Is run by gasoline, And she's sanitary, too; But dad gets fifteen cents a quart For milk that once brought two.

"Oh, that's nothing to worry about," replied his friend consolingly. "The first time I saw you I laughed out loud, but I soon got used to your face."
